Slight Blaze in Hotel.

Yesterday morning about 10 o'clock fire was discovered in a clothes press at the Dewey hotel. The fire had been smoldering among the summer clothing packed away there for some time, when it was discovered by Mrs. Newhouse, she smelling smoke, called in a neighbor. with whose assistance the fire was soon put out, after burning clothing to the extent of $200 to $300. It is very fortunate that it did not occur at night, as with a little more start, the result would have been serious. Mr. Newhouse was in Pittsburg on business at the time.

AT THE THEATRE.

Recently at the Grand opera house, Philadelphia, a crowded house witnessed one of the best musical comedy attractions of the season. Tom Waters, the star of the piece, was never seen in that city to better advantage than in the character of Michael Ignatius O'Flynn in "Neighborly Neighbors" and the supporting company was excellent throughout the entire performance. Mr Waters talent seems to be unlimited and his piano specialty was the best thing of the kind ever seen in that city. No better title could be selected for this play than "Neighborly Neighbors" for this uproarious bunch of fun. In the title roll, one sees nothing but a fine blending of good nature and harmony. It is in reality a continuous mixup of fighting neighbors and all worked up in a net work of the most comical situations imaginable Monessen opera house Wednesday, Jan. 31.

When You Lose Your Taste.

"When people lose their taste," said a physician, "they retain their old likes and dislikes just the same. Miss Smith, for instance, can't tell a slice of roast beef from a fried onion, but she disliked onions before her taste went, and therefore she won't eat them now. People lose their taste through severe illnesses, and with the loss of taste the loss of smell nearly always goes; hence queer, cruel practical jokes. I know a woman without smell to whom a pint of onion juice was sent in a cologne bottle. She deluged herself with this onion juice and appeared in a crowded heated ballroom.

"To a man without taste or smell all cheeses must be alike, yet old Brownlow won't touch limburger. He says it would make him ill, and probably it would. It is very odd to hear these deficient people praising and condemning food and drink. They do it, though. They do it as heartily as you or I. I have seen old Brownlow send away in disgust a glass of white wine, claiming it was corked, while at the same time he ate calmly an addled egg."—Baltimore Herald.

The Confusion of Wives.

Occasionally the excess of wives in Utah leads to amusing consequences, as when one of the apostles invited a visiting gentile to dinner. The guest lost the address and looked up the apostle in the directory. He observed that his hostess, though she answered to the proper name, seemed unprepared for him, and presently he heard her at the telephone.

"Oh, Emma! Is John living at your house this week? Is he expecting somebody to dinner today? Very well. The gentleman will be there in a few minutes."

Then returning to the stranger she handed him a paper slip.

"You came to the wrong house, sir. This is the address you want."

On another occasion a little girl came running into the parlor while a visitor was calling.

"Mamma, mamma! Papa wants his suit case packed. He is going to live with Aunt Emma this week."—Leslie's Monthly.

Meats and Digestion.

Of all known meats veal is the hardest to digest, requiring five hours and thirty minutes. The Italians are a happy people. They are healthy and hopeful. Their favorite meat is veal. Veal in the New York markets must weigh exactly 120 pounds to the carcass to be perfect. That is the standard of quality and price. All sorts of tricks are resorted to to hit the mark precisely. The question is, What is best for the human race, food that requires a long time to digest or a short time? Roast beef is digested in three hours. We Americans are great eaters of pork, which is nearly as hard to digest as veal, requiring five hours and fifteen minutes. We are a nation of dyspeptics, reveling in fresh bread, which takes three hours and fifteen minutes. China and Japan live on rice, which digests in one hour.—New York Press.

Under a Fly's Wing.

One of the Nuremberg toymakers inclosed in a cherry stone which was exhibited at the French Crystal palace a plan of Sevastopol, a railway station and the "Messiah" of Klopstock. In more remote times an account is given of an ivory chariot, constructed by Mermecides, which was so small that a fly could cover it with his wing; also a ship of the same material which could be hidden under the wing of a bee. Pliny, too, tells us that Homer's "Iliad," with its 15,000 verses, was written in so small a space as to be contained in a nutshell, while Elian mentions an artist who wrote a distich in letters of gold which he inclosed in the rind of a kernel of corn. But the Harleian manuscript mentions a greater curiosity than any of the above, it being nothing more or less than the Bible written by one Peter Bales, a chancery clerk, in so small a book that it could be inclosed in the shell of an English walnut.

In Full Dress.

"Gosh all hemlock!" snorted Uncle Silas, backing away from the door.

"What is the trouble, sir?" queried the footman.

"I thought I was gittin' in th' ballroom, an' I come within one of buttin' right in thar to th' ladies' dressin' room."

"That is not the ladies' dressing room," rejoined the footman. "It is the ballroom."—Houston Post.

ORIGIN OF BAGPIPES

IT IS FOUND IN THE ANCIENT REED, OR SHEPHERD'S PIPE.

In Early Times There Were Many Different Kinds of Bagpipes In Use In Europe—The Highland, Lowland and Irish Varieties.

According to the cyclopedia, the bagpipe is a wind instrument the fixed characteristic of which has always been two or more reed pipes attached to and sounded by a wind chest, or bag, which bag has in turn been supplied either by the lungs of the performer or by a bellows. The original instrument was presumably the simple reed, or shepherd's pipe, which was well known to the Trojans, Egyptians, Greeks and Romans. But the strain of blowing these ancient pipes was so great that some genius conceived the idea of having a reserve supply of wind in a bag attached to the pipes, and hence the bagpipe. The first reed instrument is believed to have been a skin of a goat or kid, with two pipes, through one of which the bag was inflated, the other emitting the sound.

In early times the bagpipe was common in Great Britain and abroad. At one time there were five different kinds known on the continent, some inflated by the mouth and others by bellows, while in the British isles three kinds were known—the great highland bagpipe, the lowland bagpipe of Scotland (which closely resembled the Northumbrian) and the Irish bagpipe.

In the great highland bagpipe, which originally had but one drone, a valved tube leads from the mouth to an air tight bag, which has four other orifices, three large enough to contain the base of three fixed long tubes, termed drones, and another smaller, to which is fitted the chanter. The three are thrown on the shoulder, while the latter is held in the hands. All four pipes are filled with reeds, but of different kinds. The drones are tuned by means of sliders, or movable joints, and this tuning or preparation for playing, which generally occupies a few minutes of the piper's time before he begins the tune proper, is heard with impatience by those not accustomed to the instrument. Indeed, it gave rise to the saying, applied in Scotland to those who waste time over small matters, "You are longer in tuning your pipes than in playing your tune."

The Scottish lowland bagpipe, like the Northumbrian pipe, was in two forms, one consisting of a smaller and milder toned edition of the highland instrument and the other a miniature of this and having the same relation to it as the fife has to a German band. Its great drawback, from the point of view of the devotees of the highland bagpipe, is that it is unsuited to perform what they consider the perfection of pipe music—the pibroch. These small pipes were, however, gentler than the highland, having the same tone, but less sonorous. It was to the strains of such a bagpipe that Chaucer tells us the company of pilgrims left London, and it is the same instrument that is alluded to in Shakespeare as the Lincolnshire bagpipe.

The Irish bagpipe is the instrument in its most elaborate form and is supplied with wind by a bellows. The drones are all fixed on one stock and have keys which are played by the wrist of the right hand. The reeds are soft and the tones very sweet and melodious, and there is a harmonious bass which is very effective in the hands of a good player. The Irish instrument is fast dying out.

The bagpipe, though at one time fairly common, never obtained a firm hold in England. It lost favor and gradually deteriorated until it is now practically extinct. The average Englishman neither appreciates nor understands it. A famous poet irreverently once compared its notes to "the shrill screech of a lame goose caught in corn," while another heretic writer likens its sound to a "horrible, noisy, mad Irishman" or to the cries of the "eternally tormented." To the Irish people it appeals more strongly. They still possess in a degree the feeling of attachment to the bagpipe which is so general among Scotsmen. But it is undoubtedly more closely associated with Scotland, both in the highlands and lowlands, than with any other country, the particular instrument in use being the great highland bagpipe, which, as already explained, consists of three drones, including the big drone, which was added about the beginning of the last century. It is this type which has gradually superseded the lowland pipe. There is no doubt that the bagpipe was in use in Scotland from a very early period, and it is in Scotland that it has been brought to the highest degree of perfection. Its music distinctly connects it with Scotland, as is clear in the pibroch, the strathspey, the reel, the march and other popular melodies. There are proofs that the instrument was cultivated in Scotland certainly in the twelfth century and of its universal popularity as early as the fifteenth century, while in the seventeenth century nearly every town in the highlands and lowlands boasted of its piper.—London Globe.

OVER THE PRECIPICE.

A Tragic Adventure In a Blizzard In the Antarctic.

Here is an adventure in the antarctic regions taken from Captain Robert F. Scott's "The Voyage of the Discovery." Nine men are returning from a sledge expedition in a blinding snowstorm: "An unusually violent squall prevented us from seeing even one another. I immediately ordered a chain to be formed at right angles and extending across our track, each man keeping in touch with the rest, with the idea of intercepting Hare, who was missing, when he came on. We shouted and blew whistles, and while this was going on Evans stepped back on to a patch of bare, smooth ice and shot out of sight immediately. Thinking the slope to be one of the short ones so common in the folds of the hills, Barne sat down and deliberately started to slide in Evans' track. In a moment or two the slope grew steeper, and soon he was going at a pace which left him no power to control his movements. He whipped out his clasp knife and dug it into the ice, but the blade snapped off short and failed to check his wild career. In a flash the ice changed to snow, which grew softer until, in a smother of flying particles, his rapid flight was arrested and he stood up to find Evans within a few feet of him."

A third man joined them in similar fashion: "Realizing the impossibility of ascending again by the way they had come, they started to descend, but within four paces of the place at which they had been brought to rest they found that the slope ended suddenly in a steep precipice, beyond which they could see nothing but the clouds of whirling snow. Even as they recoiled from this new danger and dimly realized the merciful patch of soft snow which had saved them from it, a yelping dog flew past them, clawing madly at the icy slope, and disappeared forever into the gloom beyond." The six others eventually moved on until they, too, found themselves on an awkward slope: "Their leader suddenly saw the precipice beneath his feet and far below, through the wreathing snow, the sea.

"Another step would have taken him over the edge. He sprang back with a cry of warning, and those behind him, hearing it, dug their heels instinctively into the surface, and, with one exception, all succeeded in stopping. What followed was over in an instant. Before his horror stricken companions had time to think poor Vince, unable to check himself with his soft fur boots, had shot from among them, flashed past the leader and disappeared." Vince was never seen again, but Hare, the first missing man, staggered back to the ship two days after the others, remembering nothing between struggling to a patch of rock for shelter and waking thirty-six hours later covered with snow.

THE MAN ON FOOT.

In Stamboul He Has No Rights as Against the Horseman.

One of the peculiarities in Stamboul is the insolent demeanor of the horseman to the footman. Many times daily you will see some rascal of a caiman trying to drive down a well dressed man on the street. The drivers rarely take the trouble to shout as they approach pedestrians. I was often filled with wonder at observing the meekness with which well dressed Turks on foot submitted to such treatment from shabby Turks on carriage boxes. Even when no injury was done to such a pedestrian, he was often bespattered with mud. Stamboul must be an unpleasant place in which to live. Were caimen in our country to treat pedestrians so recklessly there would be many cases of assault and battery, and I think some mortality among the Jehus.

One day I saw a uniformed Turk picking his way across the street, using his saber as a walking stick. A carriage suddenly dashed down on him, and its driver, after nearly running over him, hurled at him a volley of what sounded like choice Turkish abuse. The uniformed Turk retorted not. He scraped the mud off his uniform, stuck his saber under his arm and waded ashore. In our country a man with a saber would have used it on the driver's back. By this I do not mean that the Turks are lacking in spirit—far from it, but apparently it would seem to be the custom of the country that the man on foot, as against the man on horseback, has no rights.—"A Levantine Log Book," by Jerome Hart.

Claims According to Order.

Bill Handy of Marblehead, an ardent Republican during the antislavery agitation, caught fish and sold clams for a livelihood. One of his customers, a strong Democrat, ordered some clams and told him to be sure and cut off the "black abolition heads." When he delivered them he said, "Mr. Brown, here are your clams; real Democrats—all bodies and no heads."—Boston Herald.

Possible Explanation.

An old hen was pecking at some stray carpet tacks in the back yard.

"Now, what do you suppose that fool hen is eating those tacks for?" said Homer.

"Perhaps," rejoined his better half, 'she is going to lay a carpet."—Chicago News.

Should suffer in the face of evidence like this:

Mrs. Alndra A. Jackson, of East Front St., Traverse City, Mich., says: "For twenty years I was doctoring for kidney and liver trouble but without benefit. Just before I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I was almost paralyzed. I could hardly stand on my feet because of the numbness and lack of circulation. Had a knife been thrust into my kidneys the pain could not have been more intense. My sleep was disturbed by visions of distorted figures. The kidney secretions were annoyingly irregular, and I was tortured with thirst and always bloated. I used seven boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. The bloating subsided until I weighed 100 pounds less, could sleep like a child and was relieved of the pain and the irregularity of the kidney action. My circulation is good and I feel better in every way."

How He Got His Start

[Original.]

A young man who had buried his father the day before opened a safe in which the family papers were kept, took out a tin box and, on raising the cover, saw on top of the pile one addressed to himself in his father's handwriting. Breaking the seal, he read:

"When, my dear son, you receive the shock in store for you contained in this paper I shall be removed from any reproaches you may feel like casting upon me. I have always intended to tell you what I am telling you now, but as you grew older and our wealth increased I shrank from doing so. Know now, my son, that the father whom you have always loved and reverenced was once a common tramp. My father would make a farmer of me or apprentice me to a tradesman. I had no fancy for either occupation. What I was fitted for was then not apparent, and the result was that I was considered fitted for nothing, and this was partly my own opinion. One day, frenzied at the restraint and humdrum life of a saddler's apprentice, I broke away from him and became a tramp.

"One night I was stealing—I wish I could use some other word—a ride under a car on an express train, when the breaks were applied suddenly and the train came to a quick stop. I heard several shots ahead and surmised that the train had been held up by robbers. I was under the front end of the smoking car. Behind were the passenger cars, next before me was the baggage and express car and next the locomotive. Two men, whom I could see by the dim light were masked, passed rapidly from the front to the rear cars. I let myself down and ran into the woods close beside the track. The ground was higher on that side, and, going forward, I could look right into the locomotive.

"The engineer was lying dead on the cab floor. A masked man stood between cab and tender, leaning out and looking backward. Two men came forward, and I heard them tell their own engineer that the express agent had been too quick for them and had locked the doors of the car. The engineer, who seemed to be their leader, swore at them and, pointing to a pile of ties beside the track, told them to take one of them and burst open the door. Seizing a tie, they began to batter at the door, the engineer watching them from the cab impatiently. It was plain to me that he wished to go and do the work himself, but dared not leave the cab. Presently his patience gave way and with a smothered growl he jumped down and ran to them.

"Then it occurred to me that were I in his place I could not restrain myself from doing just what he did. I saw an opportunity for me to save the express car. If I could uncouple the car and get into the cab I might run it off before they could stop me. It was a slim chance, for even if I got the car uncoupled unobserved and started the locomotive they had only to go half a car's length to get on the cab, kill me and turn off the steam. The danger only made the plan more fascinating to me. Within a few seconds all these things passed through my brain, and my resolution was formed.

"Sliding down the incline, I got under the express car on the opposite side from that on which the men were working, though by this time they were at the rear door. I ran along beside the car and stopped under the very platform on which they were operating. Fortunately I was familiar with my position. Just as I came beneath them they drew back for another blow with the tie, which, by the way, was hard to work between the two cars, and when they pushed forward I reached up and seized the coupling pin.

"Now, if cars had been coupled then as they are now, it would have been impossible for me to separate them. Had the coupling pin been held by their being jammed together or pulled too far apart this also would have blocked my game. With the scuffling going on above I could not know whether the pin was loose or tight till I tried it. My heart stood still as, taking advantage of the thickest of the turmoil, I reached up and was overjoyed that I could remove it easily.

"Now came the second part of my plan. Dashing forward, I climbed to the cab, threw back the reverse lever and as gently as I could opened the throttle. My next move was to look for a weapon. There were iron coal rakes in the tender, and I grasped one of them. It was impossible that the robbers should be unaware of the movement of the express car for any considerable time. I stood with one hand on the throttle, the other grasping the coal rake, my eyes watching my rear. Presently the engineer came running forward. I cowered in the cab, where he couldn't see me. He had his revolver in his hand as he came up, but, quick as a flash, I raised the coal rake and brought it down on his skull. He was good pluck and climbed into the cab trying to shoot me, but it was hard for him to climb and shoot at the same time. He got into the cab, but slipped at his last step and fell. I gave him another blow that finished him.

"I grabbed his revolver, and in the nick of time, for the robbers had broken into the express car, and one of them, passing through it, climbed over the rear of the tender. I shot him with the engineer's revolver. The third man was overpowered by the express and baggage agents.

"I had saved a hundred thousand dollars. The company offered me a large reward, but I asked in preference that they would educate me for a railroad man. They did so, advancing me rapidly till I am at this writing, as you know, the road's president."

S. HUNTER HALSEY.

Buster Brown.

As a general thing it is neither dignified or safe to call a man or woman a dog. But the man who appears in the role of Buster Brown's faithful friend Tige is not a dog and we would be willing to wage a dollar to a dog biscuit, that he would be promptly admitted to any canine convention in the land without the wagging of a single dissecting tail. Some French critic long ago discovered, that when an actor was especially competent, high praise might be bestowed upon him by a mere mention of the fact that he succeeded in getting into the skin of his part. Now we wish to go on record as saying, that if there was ever an actor who got more completely into the skin of his paban as this same Tige, it has not been our good fortune to see him. This make-believe Pup is about the funniest article that has come along in many a long day. He is warrented to cure a chronic case of the blues and the combination of art, journalism and dramatic effect in "Buster Brown" will satisfy that element of the population, which is seeking for an evenings entertainment, enough of Buster, little as he is and of Tige, good old dog gie, to please the most exacting critic. It is an entertainment that is certain to appeal to children and to juvenile eyes even the varying grades of plump femininity in the chorus, will probably appear merely as so many "bootiful ladies. Buster exhibits a very variegated assortment of stage tricks. He can sing, dance and act and does all creditably, being genuinely, funny and in addition he adds to the evenings merriment with a curtain speech in which he thanks all the little girls and boys in the audience for bringing their parents to see the show. Of the specialties the best is a march and drill of girls in Scotch costumes, providing the climax to the first act. This number is very handsomely dressed and the manoeuvres are executed in such a manner as to indicate laborious drilling. Friday Feb 2. Matinee at 3 o'clock.
